CCB Launches “Mobile Web Site” for Industry Professionals

The Construction Contractors Board (CCB) has made it easier for industry related professionals including contractors, permitting authorities, building inspectors and governmental officials to check a contractor’s license while in the field.

“The mobile site is designed for use with wireless and cellular handheld devices that are internet accessible,” says Shelly Wiles, CCB Information Systems Manager. “The information on the mobile site is more limited than our regular web site because it was designed to be easy to read on a very small screen with the information useful to officials in construction-related agencies.”

The information available includes current license status, the contractor’s current address and phone number, as well as links to a summary page of dispute resolution information and enforcement actions.

Clicking the phone number on a cellular phone will automatically place a call to the contractor’s phone number on record.

Wiles emphasized the general public should use the CCB website to get complete information concerning the full history of a contractor’s license, and full information concerning disputes and enforcement actions.

“We see this as tool for those in the field, away from their computer, who want to get up-to-date, targeted information quickly,” Wiles said.

The Mobile Site web address is https://cbed.ccb.state.or.us/ccb_frames/mobile/mobile_search.asp.

The Construction Contractors Board protects the public’s interest relating to improvements to real property. The Board regulates construction contractors and promotes a competitive business environment through education, contractor licensing, dispute resolution, and law enforcement.
